One of the most useful features in Adobe Photoshop Elements is the ability to crop an image like a window with a border or without. This is done through the Crop Tool. This tool will crop the image based on any of the four corners, the center, or the whitespace around the perimeter. Steps for Cropping an Image After opening an image and choosing the Crop Tool, Photoshop Elements will let you select the area around the image that you wish to crop out. Like most tools in Photoshop, there are five different ways to crop an image. You can select the Crop Tool, or directly click the four buttons located in the top right corner of the image. However you choose to crop, three important things need to be remembered. The first is that you can only crop from the original size of the image, and you cannot crop while the image is in the photo library. The second is that you have to actively select the cropped area before you can crop it. If you accidentally click to crop the wrong area of the image, you will destroy the original image. Finally, you must remember to save the new image. If you do not save the new image, you will lose all the changes you made to the original image. Crop from the Original Size When you first open the Crop Tool, Photoshop Elements displays the Rectangular Marquee Tool with a colored border at the bottom. To crop from the original image, use the Crop Tool and click either of the four buttons. (See the Cropping and Resizing Images section for a short list of all the tool's different uses.) By default, Photoshop Elements only allows you to crop the top left corner of the image. To change this, click Edit in the top left corner of the Crop Tool. In the new window, you will see a list of all the corners of the image. If you want to change the size of the cropping area, click and drag one of the corners. The default cropping area is 2.5x2.5 inches. To change the size of the cropping area, drag the bottom corner of the square or use the horizontal and vertical grips. You can resize the entire image or crop it to any size you want. To crop the image without using the Crop Tool, click the Crop button in the top right of the Crop Tool window, and drag the desired corners of a681f4349e

Multimedia Narratives Site Information French Admiral Bouët's Mediterranean Campaign Excerpts The campaign which Admiral Bouët began by sending several ships to Malta in 1798 was probably inspired by a long time plan: the seizure of Malta was to lead to the reoccupation of the French colony at the isle of Corsica, whose good position had been recognised. The Malta project, which passed through the orders of Napoleon, Louis and Charles, was a long term and complicated business, whose basic aim was to bring Malta under French rule in exchange for the services of the Corsicans, who felt the need of a protector against the Turks. The first step was to take advantage of a conflux of our forces in Villefranche-sur-Mer. On 6th February the army advanced onto the island of Minorca. It was a true expedition in the true sense of the word: after having occupied the fort of Abymes, the Turkish garrison surrendered in the course of three days without firing a shot. A Dupleix brigade was sent off to take possession of the island of Menorca which was defended by 5,000 men. On 26th February the division of Suchet invaded the town of Gharb, and after four days, without difficulty, occupied the isle of Cabrera. On 21st February the fleet under Admiral Bouët had left Toulon and was anchored at Bizerta. The mission was to seize Malta. The redoubts of the English squadron, which prevented their reaching the littoral of the island, offered obstacles which the inexperienced French navy mistook for serious defences. The enemy's threat was however too perilous: the English fleet amounted to twenty ships of the line and two frigates; to attack it was therefore necessary to split his forces, which were indeed divided. Admiral Bouët was advised of this danger and decided to make a demonstration, landing only a portion of his army with a small naval flotilla of 10 ships of the line, which took several English forts by storm. The English fleet, hastily made up of ships of all sorts, put out to oppose the French flotilla and its anchorage, but Admiral Bouët, feeling his strength, proposed to attack the enemy and soon caught sight of his enemy's sails. Our admiral then had to deal with the problem of the enemy: how to combine light to the contrary in Scheiner v. Stresher, 203 Cal. 429 [264 P. 222, 60 A.L.R. 443], and State v. Reagan, 33 Idaho 377 [196 P. 25], it is clear that petitioner did not receive a fair trial and that his plea of guilty, after new trial was denied, was not freely and voluntarily entered, and therefore, the judgment is reversed and the cause remanded with instructions to grant him a new trial. Shenk, J., Edmonds, J., Carter, J., Traynor, J., and Spence, J., concurred. "The court therefore felt that petitioner was compelled to enter his plea of guilty, after having been denied a fair and reasonable hearing before the court on the question of his competence to enter the plea of guilty; in that in the determination of the question of his competence to enter the plea of guilty, he was refused to be examined by a physician, and was forced to undergo a psychological test upon threats of a life sentence, knowing that a life sentence could not be imposed, and further that he was in a dazed condition, was confused, and he felt that he would go to prison for life, and, as a direct result, he was forced to enter his plea of guilty and he did not know what he was doing, and he did not know that it would be tantamount to the execution of his sentence." "These tests were made by Dr. Kovner, Dr. Spencer Rindler and Dr. Douglas Knox, all of the staff of the California State Prison--after which hearing petitioner was again asked to plead guilty, and he did so, and then arraigned upon the information, and the court found the facts to be true; and then petitioner was sent back to jail and was kept there for a period of twenty-one days, and on the 2d day of June, 1947, petitioner, pursuant to the aforementioned order of the Supreme Court of California, was produced before this court, before the Honorable Martin M. Nicholson, Judge of the Superior Court of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, upon the aforementioned application for writ of habeas corpus, and petitioner appeared in court in person and by his attorney, Mr. William R. Neumann. Both the District Attorney and the attorney for petitioner were present in court, and in reply to petitioner's inquiries as to why he had not been granted a writ of habeas corpus, the judge said,
