Photo: rohan-germany When do you start considering love at first sight, or is it when you start to talk to someone who you think might be the one? We asked you to give your version of first dating love, but when you get down to brass tacks — or in this case, the top of the knee — do you really know if you're head over heels? At least half of you claim to be sure and we're going to put our money where our mouths are. To be eligible for the Love at First Sight Contest, you have to agree to have a go at the quiz and also answer questions of your own. In a series of prompt-response questions, you'll be asked to name your man/woman, his/her body, the first words they said to you, where you first noticed them, what they were wearing, and which of you proposed. Then you'll reveal your own impressions of your boyfriend/girlfriend, along with two things you'd say to your honey for the rest of your lives — an ideal, and an order for fixing your relationship. You can go back and redo the quiz after you've been in a relationship for a while, but if you don't want to bother, then at least take our word for it that the site is private, so that no one from your past will

This invention relates to an electrically-conductive stainless steel stent for angioplasty. 2.

Description of the Prior Art

Various stents for angioplasty are well known. A stent is inserted into an artery either to open a blocked blood vessel, or to re-shape a vessel that has been constricted by disease. A guide catheter is inserted into the artery that is to be treated. The catheter has a core wire and a guidewire which extends through the catheter and out of its distal end. The core wire is typically about

175 cm in length. The guidewire usually has a length of about 25 cm. The catheter may be a regular angioplasty balloon catheter, or a stent delivery catheter. A balloon catheter typically has a sheath with a guidewire lumen. The guidewire is advanced through the guiding catheter and out the distal end of the guiding catheter. The catheter is advanced along the guidewire into the location in the artery where the treatment is required. The sheath protects the inner surface of the catheter and keeps the distal end of the catheter narrow to keep the profile of the catheter as small as possible. The balloon catheter is typically a balloon-inflatable catheter in which a balloon is carried on the distal end of the
