Our program is a keylogger. And you know what that is? A keylogger is a program that secretly records the activity of another program, while it is running. In a nutshell, a keylogger will log the actions performed in a software application, such as an Internet browser or an email client. If you have no idea what a keylogger is, or you want to learn more about the subject, please, read this article. If you have a question, feel free to ask. Most programs will have a keylogger built in. That is the way they work. It is a very useful feature of these programs, but it is something you should not use in general. If you have a password protected program, and if that program has a keylogger built in, then someone could be spying on you, even if you think you are perfectly safe. If you enter your passwords on someone else's computer, this might be a matter of concern. The program presented on this page does not keep any passwords, so it is not dangerous. It is
