What's New in the AnyCap Screen Recorder?

AnyCAP screen recording tool lets you capture anything you want to capture, fast. Load any software application that has an ActiveX component, and hit Record on your keyboard. AnyCAP will automatically capture the screen area, text areas, speech, keyboard input and mouse clicks. No other software is required. Liberal Harry Reid A little-known fact is that Harry Reid's involvement in the Iran-Contra affair was much deeper than we are generally led to believe. In 1986, Reid and then-Iran-Contra special counsel Lawrence Walsh interviewed and wrote the first reports on what became known as the Iran-Contra Affair. Reid was unaware that a previous special counsel, Robert Bork, had been notified that his investigation into the matter was nearing its conclusion. Reid was never given access to the rest of the raw evidence. A year later, in 1987, Reid became the Senate majority leader. He and President Bill Clinton had a tense relationship from the start. Clinton later told me, "Reid was never my political mentor." When I asked the president if he thought it was a mistake for Reid to not do more on the Iran-Contra hearings, he responded, "I don't think it was a mistake, but I think he was doing it for all the wrong reasons." Clinton said he understood Reid's fear of the hard right, and noted how Reid's relationship with Speaker of the House Tom Foley (R-WA) was that of an "arch-enemy." When Clinton took office, he said Reid was told he was going to be the president of the Senate. "He didn't say yes, he said that a senator like him — or any other senator — shouldn't be president of the Senate," Clinton said. "He told me that in so many words." Nevertheless, Clinton continued, "I would say this to you — that once it was clear in my mind that I was going to win the first time, I had decided that Reid would be majority leader — not because I needed him to be majority leader but because he wanted to be majority leader — but I just wouldn't accept it," Clinton said. Reid's book, "The Rise of Harry Reid," says that he was told by a White House staffer that Clinton
