The European Union has a duty to hear the voices of European citizens. To realise this duty, the European Commission released in 2013 a consultation entitled "From legislative process to hearing and dialogue with citizens: an opportunity for Europe". Together with the Council of Europe, the European Parliament and other stakeholders, the Commission has put forward their vision for reform. The Consultation is aimed at fostering more conversation and dialogue between European citizens and the European institutions, and includes the following key proposals.

European Citizens' Initiative This proposal is aimed at contributing to increasing the implementation of the proposed Charter. It is also aimed at helping European citizens to express opinions on issues that are of interest to them and/or which concern them directly. In line with the draft Charter, the European Commission would introduce the possibility of citizens initiating measures in the EU, subject to certain criteria. The European Commission will organise a consultation with the public to find out how European citizens feel about the idea. The consultation, which is not intended to give citizens a say in the development of the Charter, would seek to assess the following issues: The interaction of initiatives and democracy How initiatives could be used The place of the European Commission in the outcome of the consultation The wording of the Charter The Council of Europe Participants to the consultation The Charter would only be valid in the Member States of the Council of Europe, provided that in line with Article VII of the
