What's new in Leviathan –A Survival RPG–:

and Statistics Great Song's Records of Economy and Statistics is the first posthumous work written and compiled by Deng Xiaoping, the architect of the Chinese economic reforms of 1978. A Chinese micro-work (pluon), it was published in 1984; it was formally issued in English with the title The Appropriate Study of the Communist Party of China's Rule as Economy, and its Issues of 1978-1985, under the University of Chicago Press imprint of The Center for Chinese Studies, University of Michigan in 1994. Chronology The original document was published in 1983. It was primarily meant as academic text, intended to provide a basis for discussion and future research of issues of socialism with Chinese characteristics, and of particular relevance to the leadership and economic policy of the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) of the time. The original work is marked by an abundance of nuances and technical terms that required explanatory footnotes to reduce them to use in a broader audience. Issues on the surface of the work were - before translation to English - meant to be discussed and reconciled with the work of the Chinese Central Committee on the "Key Problems which Must be Resolved in Preparation for the Twentieth Congress of the CCP". More directly on the work was originally meant to be the further studies and the work in charge of the works committee of the Chinese Central Committee on the re-planning of state-owned industries. The sections on agriculture and economics and communist ideology and ideology were not considered interesting to most readers. Originally, each section had only ten to fifteen pages, for an eventual total of seventy-five. To reduce them to less than twenty in order to fit on a single page (to allow the text to be collated on a single roll of paper), sections one, five and nine were combined. As they were published as a single section, it became common to refer to it as "Politics and Economy". The section on the contradictions in the construction of socialism in the Chinese People's Republic () was disputed by several students in Beijing during the 1990s. The first decade of this century, Liu Yurun, the advocate of careful Marxism, noted that this section had a discourse on the term "actually Existing Socialism", which was only used twice in the original Chinese version, and claimed that both instances refer to Mao Zedong Thought and Maoism that Deng did not approve and had to change them from "actually Existing Socialism" to "actually Developed Socialism".
