These observations suggest that the caspase-dependent and -independent processes are necessary to induce apoptosis during 5-FU treatment. We observed two types of apoptotic morphologies in the cell death of HCT116 cells. Treatment with 5-FU resulted in cytoplasmic condensation and blebbing, which might be similar to the typical features observed during apoptosis ([@B18]). Surprisingly, we also observed an intact nucleus, which was in a shrunken state and was accompanied by the disappearance of chromatin. These features indicate that the cell death induced by 5-FU may be partly apoptotic. Bcl-2 is known to block the process of apoptosis at the mitochondrial membrane, whereas the function 0cc13bf012 have to be prepared for any eventuality." How do you actually do that? We don't really have any real hardware either, hardly any 'big' data, and very little IoT. We use our Linux sysadmins on Debian to deploy our environment and take care of upgrades. ~~~ charlieyu Before writing this piece, my first thought was 'I could talk about how we're using ServiceNow (why didn't I just write that?)...', but yours was already too entertaining. But if you're just going to write "I don't know", that's just not that interesting, is it? ;) ~~~ stiff Yeah, actually it
