DEFCON is a fast-paced real time strategy game inspired by the 1981 cult classic movie, Wargames. You take control of a General deep within an underground bunker in a cold, dark and underground war that will eventually play out on the surface of the earth above. You play a General hidden deep within an underground bunker. Your mission is to successfully exterminate your enemy's civilian population whilst saving your own. Points are awarded or lost depending on both the efficacy and thoroughness of your nuclear vendetta and the number of your own civilian deaths. In order to win you must wipe out the enemy population and simultaneously disable the enemy's ability to retaliate against you. This is an extremely difficult task since launching an attack on the enemy exposes the positions of your own Ground Silos, Subs and Bombers the moment they launch nuclear weapons, making you extremely vulnerable and exposed to a crushing counter-attack. Desperate attempts must be made to form fast, tactical alliances, alliances that may at any moment break-down to become the treacherous and most deadly of betrayals. Everyone looks to each other in a state of nervous suspense and paranoid accusation. In all-out nuclear Armageddon, everybody dies, everybody loses, you just have to make sure you lose the least! At least until the huge project she was in charge of collapsed through no fault of her own. Now the former workaholic has been put on paid leave, but without her work, what is there for her to do? Well, her boss did tell her to get out, meet people, and expand her horizons. Guided by the country songs on the radio, she travels to Nashville alone. Reluctantly leaving her old life behind, she arrives in this colorful, musical city -- and hears the whisper of an angel. "Hello, Nashville. Would you like to hear a song about love?" As we face our first real danger– a huge palace full of We Who Waist In The Emperor's Realm– we realize our greatest strength will be in the hands of three people who get along particularly well: Arti, Iver, and Noelle! Back in the real world of Kath Zilelia we're continuing by following the actors' work on the model as they paint points on the spheres, call attention to details in the soldier's costumes and weapons, apply the paint and varnish, and collaborate over the canvas. On the day of Noelle's section, we look at her part in developing the "base" color of the Emperor's Realm palace. This is a gathering of artists from WIPWorks who met at the Amberstone Hotel in Guelph, Ontario, for a number of Creative Stargazing workshops and events. Derek Tyrie, a software developer for the science museum in Denmark, and an avid player of tabletop RPGs, wanted to bring RPG tools to the forefront of his games. Since the tools are represented as a model, he sketched models on manila and graph paper and used Adobe Photoshop to apply his base color scheme. This series is his first for Fantasy Flight Games and shows the process he used to create the pieces for Bring Them Back. Brush strokes Styliks are detailed in light and dark shading Detail work What's the difference between the sketches and the final piece? The artist himself described his process: I start with a rough idea of the general form and composition of the piece, with ideas who the people are and how they wear the armor, the background, the details and accessories. This later phase is achieved with few strokes of a very tiny brush, so not everything is perfect, but the composition is ok. Then, I develop the style in a photo-like way, with the different textures and techniques, until it is ready to go onto the lamp-shade. It is ready when I get a satisfied feeling on the pencils, they feel right to me. When that happens, I is almost ready. But, with this, it is true that I require the encouragement of the crew, because there is no guarantee that if it is good, it will be accepted as a usable piece. One level above, I finally do finishing, are the final pieces
