John-Henry Neale and Mary Henderson Neale, loving parents, have been fighting for years over the custody of their son, James. The court case has gone on for 10 years and the custody of James continues to be a major dispute between John-Henry and Mary. When they were first married in 1994, John-Henry Neale purchased a double house on Dundas Street in Glenferrie, where the family lived together for 2 years. The husband and wife took up a partnership in the late 1990s and bought a house in Osmond Court. It was the start of a long saga, which has resulted in the ongoing custody battle between the parents, of James. What evidence do I have? As the legal process continues, there is no doubt there is evidence which can help in helping the courts decide what is in the best interest of the young boy, James. This is when it becomes necessary to bring in people to tell the court their side of the story and point out facts. That's what happened in the recent court hearing. What you can and can't do The person who is representing the children is allowed to speak to those who are already in the courtroom. In fact, they have even been permitted to question the man whose side of the story they are representing, John-Henry Neale himself. During the hearing, only the person representing the children's rights, Isabella Cooke, is permitted to speak. No one else is allowed to speak without permission. Notably, there were a number of people who have either attended the recent hearing or spoken to Isabella Cooke. Mary Neale turned up at the hearing and she also spoke to Isabella Cooke in the courtroom. Just before Mary spoke, she spoke out to John-Henry Neale, saying: "We want nothing more than to live in a happy house. We can't imagine a life without him. He's everything to us." Was the man who has been accused of multiple offences, John-Henry Neale, guilty? He has pleaded not guilty. No doubt that is a decision he made long before the family legal battle reached this point. Was there evidence of what the man did? It was the day before, or the day of the hearing, that Justice Paul Coghlan decided

Q: Issues using INSERT INTO multiple SELECT I got a table like this: create table "sometable" (SomeID int, SomeString varchar(20), SomeDate Date); I'm trying to insert a new row using multiple SELECT statements as follows: insert into sometable (SomeID, SomeString, SomeDate) SELECT INSERT INTO SOMETABLE (SELECT SomeID FROM SOMETABLE) AS SomeID, INSERT INTO SOMETABLE (SELECT SomeString FROM SOMETABLE) AS SomeString, INSERT INTO SOMETABLE (SELECT SomeDate FROM SOMETABLE) AS SomeDate, FROM SOMETABLE But it is giving me the following error: Invalid column name 'SomeID'. Invalid column name 'SomeString'. Invalid column name 'SomeDate'. I know that the first SELECT statement is great since it gives me the exact value that I want to insert. But how can I write that statement for all three SELECT statements? A: You can't insert into the same table multiple times in the same statement. You could use a temp table to hold the data first, then insert that. CREATE TABLE #inputtemptable (SomeID int, SomeString varchar(20), SomeDate Date) INSERT INTO #inputtemptable SELECT SomeID FROM SOMETABLE INSERT INTO SOMETABLE (SELECT SomeID FROM #inputtemptable) AS SomeID, INSERT INTO SOMETABLE (SELECT SomeString FROM #inputtemptable) AS SomeString, INSERT INTO SOMETABLE (SELECT SomeDate FROM #inputtemptable) AS SomeDate, FROM SOMETABLE The effect of the in vivo application of a botulinum neurotoxin on axonal membrane proteins. The effect of intraperitoneal injection of botulinum neurotoxin type A (1.3.U) to rats on the distribution of axonal membrane proteins (out) was studied. The axons from the sciatic nerve of the lower limb and the hypogloss
