Council voted to oppose the sale of the property, making the deal dependent upon amendments to the city's buy out ordinance. The council also voted to move a resolution to oppose the public involvement initiative that took over control of the Civic Center park earlier this year. David Chard, an investor from Fort Collins, had a motion to sell the property at the park that divided the council members after it was brought up by Mayor Pro Tem Mick Donovan. According to public records, the $19.5 million offer was over 11.5 percent lower than what the town had accepted from another party before the council sat down, only a few weeks ago. "Based on the time value, if a deal falls apart, it doesn't look too good," Donovan said. "I think the chance of it being successful to anything close
