As Gary Johnson closes in on double figures in a national poll, the Libertarian Party is eyeing the record of Vermont Governor Howard Dean as the party's standard bearer. Dean took the party by storm four years ago, securing more votes than some better-known Democrats. His performance brought the party national prominence. Today, with Dean now running for the presidency, the party is hoping to draw on his record of success, not to mention his warm personal appeal. "We definitely consider him as the heir apparent," said Libertarian National Committee Chair Nicholas Sarwark. "He was the first leader of the party and showed a lot of leadership skills. He has the name recognition, he has the skills, he has the passion, and he's a great candidate." Dean will speak at the national convention next week, and Sarwark says he will make it clear that he is the party's choice for the White House. "He's a very good candidate," Sarwark said. "He can communicate on our issues, and I think he's certainly someone who can win over more voters than most." Two years ago, Johnson was the second choice of a quarter of voters, according to the latest polls. But his numbers have risen, and he is now often selected as the first or second choice of the same percentage of voters that back Mitt Romney or Barack Obama, according to five separate polls of likely voters taken in the last month. According to exit polls, Johnson won 6 percent of the vote in 2008, and was the choice of 6 percent of likely voters in the November elections. That compares to John McCain's 6.7 percent and
