B-cell prolymphocytic leukaemia: molecular pathogenesis and therapeutic implications. B-cell prolymphocytic leukaemia (B-PLL) represents a B-cell malignancy characterized by the accumulation of mature, multilobed, mature B cells, most of which are CD5-positive. B-PLL has a good prognosis, but a small subset progresses to lymphoma and even acute lymphoid leukaemia. Chromosome and molecular cytogenetics have identified a recurrent t(11;14)(q13;q32) translocation, which juxtaposes the retinoic acid receptor beta (RARβ) gene to the p53 tumour suppressor gene. Other breakpoint regions and tumour suppressor gene defects were also identified. Recent studies of the involvement of the p53 pathways in B-PLL may help to define new therapeutic targets for refractory disease. Rhodium(III) complexes with chelating diphosphine
