This study investigated the dynamics of wheat (Triticum aestivum L.) and its effect on weed emergence and species composition in a field experiment using seedbanks in soil. The soil was divided into seven areas and reseeded randomly in seven timings. In each reseeding, four types of weeds were sown in the soil. Germination dynamics of wheat and weeds were recorded throughout the experiment. The study was conducted in Khan Younis City, Southern Palestine during 2006 and 2007. The soil was rich in organic matter and had a constant pH of 6.86. The experiment revealed that the germination process of wheat was seasonal and followed a quadratic pattern. The maximum percentage of seed germination was reached after 7 months in this experiment. The highest percentage of emergence from the seedbank was around 12 months. The maximum percentage of weed emergence was recorded in the first month of the experiment. The weed species with the highest percentage of emergence were annual weeds. Crambe diaseode, Reseda luteola and Eclipta prostrata. In wheat, the highest percentage of weed emergence was 0cc13bf012
