I thought I was done with this debate about gun control when I realized I was willing to come up with a solution that might make sense, but still wouldn't work. I'm no fan of the right to keep and bear arms, but I don't see the point of packing for a fight, never going to the range, and taking lots of expensive classes to be a responsible firearm owner. I have no problem with citizens having guns to protect themselves or to hunt. I've got a solution that I'd love to hear your thoughts on, because it's completely practical for any shooter in America. For starters, I would make it legal to have handguns only in the same caliber of machine guns. Machine guns are generally much larger than handguns and more powerful, and thus require a much larger magazine than a handgun. That means the ammunition for a machine gun is a lot more expensive. An inventory requirement of 120-240 more expensive rounds per magazine would be reasonable and cost effective. In addition, because machine guns are more powerful, and because they have a larger magazine, they are generally much more difficult to control. They generally have longer barrels, and require more cleaning and maintenance. They are thus much less desirable as a self-defense tool. Ammunition for a handgun is readily available from any number of handgun ranges. In addition, if you want to be an athlete and practice your marksmanship, you have to understand the dynamics of good marksmanship. I'm not saying that there's anything magical about shooting a.22 Long Rifle and a.45 Colt revolver off a 70-pound plate at 50 feet. But you have to do it. So let's make it legal to own and practice with large handguns, but when you want to practice sport shooting, you have to shoot smaller caliber guns. In fact, those machines can be quite affordable and are available for private purchase. They are also very effective at short range. Of course, if the government makes it illegal for you to have or own a machine gun, you won't be able to get your hands on one. It would be the height of economic stupidity for the government to make it illegal for you to own and use a weapon that is more powerful and much more expensive than the weapon it is designed to replace. If you want to be an athlete and practice your marksmanship, you have to understand the dynamics of good marksmanship. It's

Correlation of mechanical properties of CCHMC and poly(methyl methacrylate) bone cements under linear and compressive dynamic loads. The cement mantle is widely used in orthopedics, but it is affected by the mechanical properties of the bone cement used to bind it to the bone. Poly(methyl methacrylate) (PMMA) bone cement has been widely used for decades, but recently the attention has been focused on calcium chelating hydrated cements (CCHMC) as an alternative to PMMA because of its biocompatibility and biostability. The aim of the present work is to assess the mechanical properties of two commercial CCHMCs and PMMA bone cements, processed by the same manufacturer. The difference between the mechanical properties of the two CCHMCs under compressive loads are also discussed. Three different bone cements with a similar composition were produced from two bioactive glass cements (BGCC and CCHMC B) and one poly(methyl methacrylate) bone cement (PMMA). The mechanical tests were carried out using an Instron machine, being a compression test (linear) and compressive cyclic test (linear and cyclic). No significant difference was found among the mechanical properties obtained in the compression test. On the contrary, under dynamic loads, BGCC and CCHMC bone cements showed a statistically significant difference of compressive strength and energy absorption and loss coefficients. PMMA bone cement showed no difference in compressive strength under dynamic loads. The particularities of the tested materials in terms of the mechanical properties make the choice of the correct bone cement very important when performing an orthopedic operation. Only a combination of mechanical and biological properties will contribute to an adequate in vivo function of the implant. Surveying refugees and non-refugees with the National Center for PTSD. The Trauma Symptom Checklist for DSM-5 (TSC-5) for refugees and non-refugees is presented. A total of 74 non-refugees, 109 asylum-seekers, and 52 refugees who had undergone the screening were selected from a larger sample. Results from the TSC-5 indicated that refugees showed greater PTSD symptom severity, and higher than non-refugees on 9 out of the 25 TSC-5 items. Refugees reported slightly lower self-reported quality of life than non-refugees. The findings demonstrate that refugees and non-refugees differ in their trauma-related symptom
