Q: Why limit the number of frames per second? Why does the default limit for the number of frames per second (from the dropdown list) in Blender 2.8a's video editing mode have the value 30? (it is on a relatively high-end PC, 16 GB RAM). Is this the preferred value, and if so, is there a general rule for this? A: [Blender 2.8] It's an infinite loop issue: [Blender 2.7] It's probably due to file size. Q: Create a static kernel and initramfs I'm trying to create a single static kernel and initramfs. To do that, I created an empty initramfs using cpio, and created a kernel in it (kernel.img) using mkimage. Is it possible to configure the system to use the kernel in the initramfs instead of the one that comes with it by default (initrd.img). A: If you wish to use a static kernel in your initramfs, add the following lines to the file /etc/modprobe.d/initramfs.conf, so your initramfs will not try to load any module and will only have static 595f342e71
