I have a model which has a collection of symbols, I have it setup in an Active Record relationship. I want to add the has_many: :through relation to the symbol object itself, but I would like the has_many part of the relation to be only active for particular symbols. I have a symbol_type_id passed into my create method, and I want to have the relationship to an instance of the symbol, but only if the symbol_type_id matches the id of the symbol. How would I achieve this? A: Something like this should get you started: class Symbol :symbol_types, :source => :symbol_types, :conditions
