High-performance, fully integrated microcomputer with BIOS, OS,.Shape-determining properties of thin carbon electrodes on plastic foil. A high-resolution scanning probe microscope (SPM) was applied to investigate the structure and shape-determining properties of carbon nanotubes (CNTs) deposited directly on plastic foil. As a template the SPM tip was a pyramidal cone, whereas the CNT growth occurred through a soft molding process. The effect of the process parameters, namely, the growth parameters, the surface temperature, and the wettability of the foil, was studied in detail. The following conclusions can be drawn from this study: (i) The walls of the carbon nanotubes (CNTs) consist of a hexagonal diamond structure and form capillary necks, which ensure a good contact with the foil. (ii) The influence of the growth parameters can be quantified with atomic force microscopy (AFM) and the scanning tunneling microscope (STM). Two corresponding growth mechanisms are distinguished by these methods: (a) the tip-assisted mechanism, and (b) the chemical vapor deposition (CVD) mechanism with two different growth modes. The growth mechanism strongly depends on the wettability of the foil, while the surface temperature has only minor effect. (iii) The conditions necessary to obtain CNTs with a specific angular orientation are significantly simpler than conditions under which the tip and the surface are rotated. In both cases a very high number of CNTs is obtained and their growth is ensured by the properties of the tip/substrate system.Q: Read 6d1f23a050
