Q: Getting.js files to load when running an angular app through node.js/express Here is the directory structure of a node.js server server/api/ - index.js - packages/ - my-Angular-App/ - index.html -...

I am using a simple index.js file like this

const express = require('express'); const app = express(); app.use(express.static(__dirname + '/../..../packages/my-Angular-App/')); app.get('/*', (req, res) => { console.log('/this-works'); res.send('...'); }); app.get('/', (req, res) => { console.log('/this-doesnt-work'); res.send('...'); }); app.listen(3000, () => { console.log('working on '); });

index.html file inside the 'packages' directory is simply

When I try as the first request, I get the console.log from the first function from above, but the html file is never actually rendered. In contrast, when I visit all works fine, and I see the code from the 2nd function. My expectation was that this would work the same way, but I don't understand why it's not loading the script tags from the index.js file.

A: You need to use the public path

app.get('/', (req, res) => { console.log('/this-doesnt-work');
