Meiotic prophase is a fundamental stage of male germ cell development and is characterized by the recombination of homologous chromosomes. Meiotic recombination occurs within defined regions of the sex chromosomes and the autosomes during the pachytene stage. To assess the mammalian pachytene stage, we have used combinations of two molecular markers to detect the distribution and sequence of recombination events. A unique combination of multiple gene probes (e.g., Btg, Lit, and Poxn) and polymorphic restriction sites in the bovine genome have been used to identify recombination events in normal bulls ($n = 3$) and bulls with different translocation karyotypes ($n = 2$). A unique combination of Btg/Lit and Btg/Poxn polymorphisms were used to identify the positions of events in the sex chromosomes. A combination of Btg, Lit, and Poxn polymorphisms were used to identify events in the autosomes. Our results support the ability of these molecular markers to detect recombination events within the sex chromosomes and autosomes. Three patterns of recombination were identified in normal bovine meiosis: (1) limited recombination involving only distal portions of the sex chromosomes, (2) distal-proximal recombination involving both sex chromosomes, and (3) proximal-distal recombination involving both sex chromosomes. The pattern of recombination appeared to differ between diploid and tetraploid normal bulls.

Mesotherapy Mesotherapy Mesotherapy is the art and science of using micro-injections to deliver many different types of medications or substances directly into the skin. These devices, called micro-needles, work by penetrating the skin and injecting the medication under the skin using small needles. The needle size used for mesotherapy is smaller than the size of a common household needle. The procedure is done by a licensed mesotherapy practitioner. Mesotherapy is a term used to describe the delivery of medication or substances into the skin. It is a term used mostly by physicians, though the practice is not well known or practiced by most of the general population. Mesotherapy can be used to treat large areas of the body as well as small, well-defined areas of the body. Most of the time, it is used to reduce the appearance of cellulite
