The greenest architecture is everywhere. Based on organic forms. Based on imperfections. Based on tension, negative and positive space, and materials. In the midst of this exciting new trend is the Indian designer Swasti Mitra, whose use of unconventional materials and inventive typologies has led her to become one of the most exciting architectural voices on the Indian landscape today. A report on the influence of the contemporary media and culture on the traditional design sensibilities of India's architects can be read here. Furniture has always held a central position in any Indian dwelling. While furniture of the past played an important role in defining the architecture of the space and in illustrating the wealth and culture of the owners, it has recently been redefined to reflect the changing lifestyles and lifestyles of Indians. It has become a crucial element of design that is given a separate identity and a distinct place within the dwelling. Architectural furniture takes on a whole new level of importance in any Indian dwelling. Smart phones are redefining the ways in which consumers live and interact with the world. Smart phones provide an ever-increasing amount of functionality and a tool to our daily lives. When the conversation around technology and architecture makes us think of the expansion of the global smart phone market, we forget the complexity of the Indian smart phone market, and how a few common customer-facing features of a global standard can be entirely different from the Indian version. In this entry, we will look at how a simple design can take on a wide range of
