In my calendar, there is an appointment that I selected, and it says: I am on my lunch break. I check the time of day on the computer, and it says: 11:00. I then go on my lunch break. When I come back from lunch, there is another appointment scheduled for me on my calendar, and it says: I am in the doctor's office. I check the time of day on the computer and it says: 12:00. I walk back to my office, but the time says: 11:45. On the computer that is normally my work one, the time shows correctly, however, on my work computer, it shows 11:30, I set the work computer to show local time. Is this a time zone setting problem, or is it a bug. What a week!! I have gone crazy. A: The time has changed due to daylight savings. A: A related phenomenon occurs on lots of machines and isn't related to daylight savings. The clock on a machine can be set for a time zone that is in one time zone during the year and another during daylight savings time, which would be different from the local time of the hardware clock. Your work computer (workleemachin) is probably set for a time zone one time zone ahead. If you want to get your system clock into sync with the system clock, set the machine clock for the time zone that your system is in now, using the hardware clock. The Q-Set The Q-Set is a funk/soul band led by Darren Paulson formerly of Steely Dan fame. Musical career The Q-Set's sound is an amalgam of jazz, funk, and boogie-woogie with soul influences. He formed the band and began writing/composing in 2006. Paulson was active in a group called the "Odd Coves" which evolved into a band that primarily performed as "2-Steppin'". Paulson has been compared to Stevie Wonder, Marvin Gaye and Al Green for his smooth and melodic singing style, but has said he doesn't like that label.
