Helium Ions (Free), David Halliday, Bernard McArthur, North-Holland Publishing Division, 2010. by Jessica Lowe Inspired by a call to be more creative in the New Year, the project resulted in a collaborative project between Roz Hartin, Level Design, U4D, and myself, Technical Art. I created the emotes and script, while the rest of the team were responsible for the gameplay assets, including the gameplay raster, cinematics and level design. We began by drawing reference imagery and using that as the basis for the emotes. The script itself was based around the mechanics of these emotes and the gestures they required. We then worked on rendering them to flesh them out as much as we could in the given time frame. Once we had an idea of where we wanted to go, it became less about finding a particular look, but instead about exploring the range of possibilities that the engine provided us with. The assets provided by the team were, not surprisingly, built around the concepts we arrived with. This gave us the freedom to mould each concept into something we could imagine, rather than simply maintaining the fidelity of what the assets were for the game. We were careful with how we modified the assets and it took a significant amount of re-work to get from the version we originally had to the final version. I really enjoy creating emotes, so I'm looking forward to seeing how this project develops and what the end result will be! Viva la Revolucija: TRIGA VIVA LA REVOLUCIJA: TRIGA The Viva La Revolucija: TRIGA team will be working on a new release. This version is based on Ubuntu 16.04. This release would be a first-time release, i.e., no existing repositories will be used. For this initial release, we are going to use the following technology: Debian 9.1-7 Ubuntu 16.04 This will be used for our main-stream (or "stable") release Three variants of desktop-based infrastructures will be provided: TrigA 6d1f23a050
